

70390702 # Sunday night will bring a short spell of sharp cold before a winter storm rolls in Tuesday morning. # Yes, it's winter in New England. # After a mild Sunday with a high in the low 40s, the overnight into Monday will likely feel downright frigid, with a low near 19 and wind gusts near 34 miles per hour, the weather service said. # Advertisement # A storm system is looming for the early part of the week, with much of the state likely to see snowflakes starting Monday night, according to forecasters. Snow accumulation is expected to be minimal, but northern and western parts of Massachusetts might see anywhere from 1 to 4 inches. # Get Metro Headlines in your inbox: # The 10 top local news stories from metro Boston and around New England delivered daily. # Monday is expected to be cold but dry in Boston, with a high near 29 degrees and no snow expected until about 3 a.m. Tuesday, the weather service said. # Less than an inch of snow is then expected to fall overnight before rising temperatures change that to a wintry mix and freezing rain as the morning commute begins, forecasters wrote. Precipitation will likely continue into the late afternoon. # Tuesday and Wednesday are expected to be relatively mild days with high temperatures near 42 degrees Tuesday and 46 Wednesday, according to the weather service. The rest of the week is expected to be dry and increasingly cool with highs near 37 Thursday and 27 Friday.